The company's software chief Craig Federighi told Bloomberg News that it's been in talks with BlackBerry's parent company, BlackBerry Limited, about offering iMessage to BlackBerry users. The Mac version would launch alongside iOS 9, but Federighi wouldn't commit to a date. "We don't have a timeline for any of these things," he said. BlackBerry users can already chat with other iMessage users on iPhones, iPads and Apple Watches. Federighi said Apple's discussions with BlackBerry have been positive. "We haven't had any indication otherwise," he said, speaking about any conflicts with Microsoft's Windows Phone operating system. Those conversations between Apple and BlackBerry are just the latest of a long-running, friendly rivalry between the two companies. The most recent clash took place in October when BlackBerry CEO John Chen said that Apple was refusing to help create a new version of the BlackBerry operating system. Apple responded to Chen by saying that it has opened up to work with BlackBerry to find a way to make a "greater number" of apps for BlackBerry that can be used on both BlackBerry 10 and Android. Apple's partnership with BlackBerry 10 ends in March of 2016, when the BlackBerry 10 operating system will be sunset. In January, Apple agreed to acquire the U.S. patent portfolio of IBM, which makes the IBM-powered operating system that runs on BlackBerrys. As part of the deal, the company did not acquire the patents covering the Symbian software that runs on Nokia's current smartphones, but it could still be incorporated into Apple's future iPhone designs.

I DID IT! I succeeded on THIS one of my ambitious projects! I went to tag The Blues in the back of my head. It's been a long time since I've done that, and it was part of the deal when I paid my dues on this neck of the woods. I'm thinking the keys to my success was my good buddy Mari' Ann's killer hair color 50b96ab0b6
